SRMC moved from 801 S. Adams St. to its current location at 200 Medical Park Blvd. in 2008. At that time, the Cancer Center remained in the relatively new wing of the old hospital. While the Cancer Center had been fully operational at its original location on Adams Street, the Southside Regional Medical Arts Pavilion offers the Cancer Center an advanced setting and convenient location on the SRMC’s main campus. Services will include radiation therapy, medical oncology clinics, infusion services, a women’s center, a community resource library and support services. This new center will also house an oncology navigator and psychosocial programs. This advanced technology coupled with the highest levels of compassion and expertise will bring unrivaled patient care to more than 200,000 local residents for years to come.

“My family, colleagues and I are all too familiar with cancer and its often devastating effects,” said Richard Rendina, Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of Rendina Companies. “Doing our part to support cancer research and treatment is something that is near and dear to us. It’s what goes on behind those walls that make me feel like we are contributing.”
